

Advising

As a rule, faculty members with responsibility for undergraduate instruction are expected to engage in the advising of undergraduate students. The precise form of this advising varies from one academic unit to another and is ordinarily established by the department chair or dean in consultation with individual faculty members. The advising expected of faculty members usually pertains to academic work within their students' college or academic major but frequently includes advice about career objectives as well (see Career Services in section 7.0). Students with emotional or psychological difficulties should seek counseling through the Counseling and Psychological Services (CAPS) at the university health center (See Gannett: Cornell University Health Services in section 7.0). Faculty are also encouraged to contact CAPS if they are concerned about a student's health.
