Gender equality and long-term prosperity in low- and middle-income countries can be achieved through policies that promote equality through recovery. The implementation of paid leave policies on companies has resulted in further bolstering the business and public policy case for expansion.

This podcast was recorded in August 2020. It is an easy-access podcast of interviews with leading experts in academia and practice for international affairs.

If you, or a group of individuals would like to lead a GEIA Virtual Coffee Hour, please register through the link below.

Let's talk!! Please use this Padlet to share your thoughts, questions, and ideas about our courses, events, and resources.

Women and Girls – physically, emotionally, and financially. Women are socialized to cope with the stressors and weathering, that undermine African American women’s physical and mental health. This is why there is a crisis need that starts with the health care system and makes the change. Policymakers, healthcare professionals, and local communities can support Black maternal health by expanding access to health services, improving quality of care for pregnant women, addressing related deaths, and implementing standardized protocols in quality improvement initiatives. In addition, healthcare systems should implement maternal mortality, the CDC recommends healthcare providers can address racism and implicit bias within the health care system. Professionals must recognize the legacies of slavery by identifying and quantifying, and evaluating the use of online gendered and sexualized injustices against Black people through a feminist lens.

We aim to eradicate white supremacy and promote equality through recovery. The GEIA Director, Dr. Shirley Graham. GEIA is a U.S. foreign service officers (current and former) and policymakers (international and domestic). This book is an interview-based podcast of interviews with leading experts in academia and practice for international affairs.

Dr. Aisling Swaine will be interviewed by Dr. Shirley Graham about his recently published book, "The First Political Order: How Sex, Lies, and Power Made History," which explores the ways in which gender, sex, and lies have shaped the course of political history. The book addresses the question of how sex and power have interacted to shape political order and outcomes, and how these interactions have been exploited by those seeking to control political systems.

The book challenges traditional narratives of political history by examining the role of gender and sex in shaping political outcomes. It explores the ways in which gender and sex have been used to manipulate political systems, and how these interactions have been exploited by those seeking to control political systems. The book is a call to action for those who seek to understand the complexities of political power and how it is used to control political systems.

The book is a foundational text of black feminism. Anna Julia Cooper was the fourth African American woman to earn a Ph.D. from Harvard University. She challenged the notion that women should be subservient to men and argued for the importance of women's education and political participation. Cooper's work continues to be relevant today, as it challenges the notion that women should be subservient to men and argues for the importance of women's education and political participation.

In December of that year, the National Convention of Women met in Washington in 1892, and assisted in opening the American Equal Rights Association where she called for the vote for both women and men. Cooper was a leading voice in the fight for women's suffrage, and her work continues to inspire activists today.

Join GEIA Director, Dr. Shirley Graham, for a discussion with feminist IR scholar Dr. Aisling Swaine about his recently published book, "The First Political Order: How Sex, Lies, and Power Made History," which explores the ways in which gender, sex, and lies have shaped the course of political history. The book addresses the question of how sex and power have interacted to shape political order and outcomes, and how these interactions have been exploited by those seeking to control political systems.

Dr. Swaine will be interviewed by Dr. Graham about his book, "The First Political Order: How Sex, Lies, and Power Made History," which explores the ways in which gender, sex, and lies have shaped the course of political history. The book challenges traditional narratives of political history by examining the role of gender and sex in shaping political outcomes. It explores the ways in which gender and sex have been used to manipulate political systems, and how these interactions have been exploited by those seeking to control political systems.

The book is a call to action for those who seek to understand the complexities of political power and how it is used to control political systems.

This book is a foundational text of black feminism. Anna Julia Cooper was the fourth African American woman to earn a Ph.D. from Harvard University. She challenged the notion that women should be subservient to men and argued for the importance of women's education and political participation. Cooper's work continues to be relevant today, as it challenges the notion that women should be subservient to men and argues for the importance of women's education and political participation.

In December of that year, the National Convention of Women met in Washington in 1892, and assisted in opening the American Equal Rights Association where she called for the vote for both women and men. Cooper was a leading voice in the fight for women's suffrage, and her work continues to inspire activists today.

Join GEIA Director, Dr. Shirley Graham, for a discussion with feminist IR scholar Dr. Aisling Swaine about his recently published book, "The First Political Order: How Sex, Lies, and Power Made History," which explores the ways in which gender, sex, and lies have shaped the course of political history. The book addresses the question of how sex and power have interacted to shape political order and outcomes, and how these interactions have been exploited by those seeking to control political systems.

Dr. Swaine will be interviewed by Dr. Graham about his book, "The First Political Order: How Sex, Lies, and Power Made History," which explores the ways in which gender, sex, and lies have shaped the course of political history. The book challenges traditional narratives of political history by examining the role of gender and sex in shaping political outcomes. It explores the ways in which gender and sex have been used to manipulate political systems, and how these interactions have been exploited by those seeking to control political systems.

The book is a call to action for those who seek to understand the complexities of political power and how it is used to control political systems.

This book is a foundational text of black feminism. Anna Julia Cooper was the fourth African American woman to earn a Ph.D. from Harvard University. She challenged the notion that women should be subservient to men and argued for the importance of women's education and political participation. Cooper's work continues to be relevant today, as it challenges the notion that women should be subservient to men and argues for the importance of women's education and political participation.

In December of that year, the National Convention of Women met in Washington in 1892, and assisted in opening the American Equal Rights Association where she called for the vote for both women and men. Cooper was a leading voice in the fight for women's suffrage, and her work continues to inspire activists today.

Join GEIA Director, Dr. Shirley Graham, for a discussion with feminist IR scholar Dr. Aisling Swaine about his recently published book, "The First Political Order: How Sex, Lies, and Power Made History," which explores the ways in which gender, sex, and lies have shaped the course of political history. The book addresses the question of how sex and power have interacted to shape political order and outcomes, and how these interactions have been exploited by those seeking to control political systems.

Dr. Swaine will be interviewed by Dr. Graham about his book, "The First Political Order: How Sex, Lies, and Power Made History," which explores the ways in which gender, sex, and lies have shaped the course of political history. The book challenges traditional narratives of political history by examining the role of gender and sex in shaping political outcomes. It explores the ways in which gender and sex have been used to manipulate political systems, and how these interactions have been exploited by those seeking to control political systems.

The book is a call to action for those who seek to understand the complexities of political power and how it is used to control political systems.

This book is a foundational text of black feminism. Anna Julia Cooper was the fourth African American woman to earn a Ph.D. from Harvard University. She challenged the notion that women should be subservient to men and argued for the importance of women's education and political participation. Cooper's work continues to be relevant today, as it challenges the notion that women should be subservient to men and argues for the importance of women's education and political participation.

In December of that year, the National Convention of Women met in Washington in 1892, and assisted in opening the American Equal Rights Association where she called for the vote for both women and men. Cooper was a leading voice in the fight for women's suffrage, and her work continues to inspire activists today.

Join GEIA Director, Dr. Shirley Graham, for a discussion with feminist IR scholar Dr. Aisling Swaine about his recently published book, "The First Political Order: How Sex, Lies, and Power Made History," which explores the ways in which gender, sex, and lies have shaped the course of political history. The book addresses the question of how sex and power have interacted to shape political order and outcomes, and how these interactions have been exploited by those seeking to control political systems.

Dr. Swaine will be interviewed by Dr. Graham about his book, "The First Political Order: How Sex, Lies, and Power Made History," which explores the ways in which gender, sex, and lies have shaped the course of political history. The book challenges traditional narratives of political history by examining the role of gender and sex in shaping political outcomes. It explores the ways in which gender and sex have been used to manipulate political systems, and how these interactions have been exploited by those seeking to control political systems.

The book is a call to action for those who seek to understand the complexities of political power and how it is used to control political systems.

This book is a foundational text of black feminism. Anna Julia Cooper was the fourth African American woman to earn a Ph.D. from Harvard University. She challenged the notion that women should be subservient to men and argued for the importance of women's education and political participation. Cooper's work continues to be relevant today, as it challenges the notion that women should be subservient to men and argues for the importance of women's education and political participation.

In December of that year, the National Convention of Women met in Washington in 1892, and assisted in opening the American Equal Rights Association where she called for the vote for both women and men. Cooper was a leading voice in the fight for women's suffrage, and her work continues to inspire activists today.