The Korean Peninsula, located in Northeast Asia, is bordered on the north by China and Russia and extends toward Japan to the southeast.

For over thousands of years, the Korean peninsula was divided into “Three Kingdoms” - Koguryo in the north, Paekche in the southwest, and Silla in the southeast. Silla defeated its rivals and unified most of the Korean peninsula in 668 CE. Korea reached close to its present boundaries during the Koryo Dynasty (918-1392), from which its Western name “Korea” is derived. The succeeding Choson Dynasty (1392-1910) further consolidated Korea’s national boundaries and distinctive cultural practices. The Japanese colonial period on Korea (1910-1945) deeply impacted Korean society on all levels, as up until that point, Korea was an independent civilization suddenly under the direct rule of a foreign power. Memories of the harsh colonial period are still relevant in modern Korean society. The surrender of Japan to the allies at the end of World War II resulted in a new and unexpected development on the Korean peninsula: the division of Korea into two separate states, one in the North (the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea) and one in the South (the Republic of Korea). The emerging Cold War between the United States and the Soviet Union in 1947, due to the political differences between Koreans of the two occupation zones and the policies of the occupation forces on the ground, led to a breakdown in negotiations over a unified government of Korea. The Korean War (1950-1953) broke out between North Korean (and eventually Chinese) forces and U.S.-led UN and South Korean forces, which left another significant impact on Korean society that tore apart families and further divided the peninsula that was unified for centuries before. An armistice was reached in 1953 that put a halt to the fighting, but with no peace treaty being reached, the Korean War has still not technically ended.
Since 1953, North and South Korea have evolved from a common cultural and historical base into two very different societies with radically dissimilar political and economic systems.

Technically still at war with North Korea, South Korea has a strict system of national military service. All able-bodied males are required to complete 21 months of national service in the army, 23 months in the navy or 24 months in the air force. There are also options to serve in the police force, coast guard, fire service and in some special cases government departments. North Korea is the country with the longest compulsory military service, 11 years for men and seven years for women.

North Korea has been heavily influenced by Soviet/Russian culture and politics as well as those of China. It has developed a self-styled politics of Juche (“self-reliance”) based on economic and political independence, having a highly centralized political system with a “Great Leader” from a single family lineage -- Kim Il-sung (founder and Supreme Leader from 1948 - 1994), Kim Jong-il (from 1994 until his death in 2011), and now Kim Jong-un since then, and a command economy. North Korea developed into perhaps the most isolated and controlled of all communist states, and even 10 years after the collapse of the Soviet Union, showed little sign of political and economic liberalization despite severe economic hardship.

South Korea has been greatly influenced by the United States and, in a more subtle way, by Japan. The United States has maintained close political, military, and economic ties with South Korea since the Republic of Korea was founded in 1948. While South Korea’s democratic practices in the first few decades were often secondary to Cold War national security concerns, since the fall of its military dictatorship in the late 1980s democracy and democratic practices have been increasingly consolidated in the Republic of Korea. South Korea made impressive economic gains in the 1970s and 1980s and can be considered now among the world’s most developed industrial countries. South Korea recovered rapidly from the Asian financial crisis of 1997 and is currently the third-largest economy in Eastern Asia, after Japan and China.
