

WORKING APART TOGETHER

IARC 484/584 - Winter 2019 - Solmaz Kive

The City of Springfield is interested in turning one of its older properties into a coworking space. With only a few decades of history, coworking is a developing concept, whose success greatly depends on the environment. In close collaboration with the City staff, we will explore diverse programs and design solutions.

This studio project engages with the issue of diversity and inclusion. Despite its increasing popularity, Cowork, which started from the Silicon Valley, is still a subculture. Taking advantage of the building's key location in downtown Springfield, we will work on design solutions to appeal to and support users of various age, class, race, sexuality, etc.

Client: The City of Springfield

Building: 138 Main Street, Springfield

Field Trip to Portland: Friday, January 11

Supported by Sustainable City Year Program