Literary Analysis

Epic Simile

An epic simile, sometimes called a Homeric simile, is an elaborate comparison that may extend for several lines. Epic similes may use the words like, as, just as, or so to make the comparison. In Part 1, lines 268–271, Odysseus uses an epic simile to describe the fallen tree from which he creates the weapon used to blind the Cyclops.

And it was like a mast / a lugger of twenty oars, broad in the beam— / a deep-sea-going craft—might carry: / so long, so big around, it seemed.

As you read, notice Homer's use of epic similes to bring descriptions to life.

Connecting Literary Elements

Similes are one example of imagery—descriptive language that creates word pictures. These pictures, or images, are created with details of sight, sound, taste, touch, smell, or movement. An epic simile contains imagery that shows how something looks or acts by comparing it to something else. For example, comparing a fallen tree to a broad mast stresses the size of the tree.

Reading Strategy

Summarizing

You can better understand the events in an epic like the Odyssey—or in any other work of literature with a complicated plot—by summarizing the events as you read. Retell the plot briefly in your own words, jotting down details about what events occurred and why.

Use a chart like the one shown to summarize episodes in the Odyssey.

PART 2
The Return of Odysseus

Review and Anticipate

In Part 1 of the Odyssey, Odysseus and his companions face many perils on their voyage from Troy to Ithaca. At some moments, they are tempted by others to forsake their voyage; at others, their lives are endangered by powerful enemies. Ultimately, Odysseus’ men bring about their own destruction at the hand of Zeus when they kill the cattle belonging to Helios.

As Part 2 begins, Odysseus is alone when he reaches Ithaca after a twenty-year absence. What do you predict will happen when Odysseus arrives home?
"Twenty years gone, and I am back again . . ."

Odysseus has finished telling his story to the Phaeacians. The next day, young Phaeacian noblemen conduct him home by ship. He arrives in Ithaca after an absence of twenty years. The goddess Athena appears and informs him of the situation at home. Numerous suitors, believing Odysseus to be dead, have been continually seeking the hand of his wife, Penelope, in marriage, while overrunning Odysseus' palace and enjoying themselves at Penelope's expense. Moreover, they are plotting to murder Odysseus' son, Telemachus, before he can inherit his father's lands. Telemachus, who, like Penelope, still hopes for his father's return, has journeyed to Pylos and Sparta to learn what he can about his father's fate. Athena disguises Odysseus as a beggar and directs him to the hut of Eumaeus, his old and faithful swineherd. While Odysseus and Eumaeus are eating breakfast, Telemachus arrives. Athena then appears to Odysseus.

From the air she walked, taking the form of a tall woman, handsome and clever at her craft, and stood beyond the gate in plain sight of Odysseus, unseen, though, by Telemachus, unguessed, for not to everyone will gods appear. Odysseus noticed her; so did the dogs, who cowered whimpering away from her. She only nodded, signing to him with her brows, a sign he recognized. Crossing the yard, he passed out through the gate in the stockade to face the goddess. There she said to him:

"Son of Laertes and the gods of old, Odysseus, master of landways and seaways, dissemble to your son no longer now. The time has come: tell him how you together will bring doom on the suitors in the town. I shall not be far distant then, for I myself desire battle."

What does Athena reveal to Odysseus about his situation at home?
Saying no more,
she tipped her golden wand upon the man,
making his cloak pure white, and the knit tunic
fresh around him. Lithe and young she made him, ruddy with sun, his jawline clean, the beard no longer gray upon his chin. And she withdrew when she had done.

Then Lord Odysseus
reappeared—and his son was thunderstruck.
Fear in his eyes, he looked down and away
as though it were a god, and whispered:

"Stranger,
you are no longer what you were just now!
Your cloak is new; even your skin! You are one of the gods who rule the sweep of heaven!
Be kind to us, we'll make you fair oblation\(^2\)
and gifts of hammered gold. Have mercy on us!"

The noble and enduring man replied:

"No god. Why take me for a god? No, no.
I am that father whom your boyhood lacked and suffered pain for lack of. I am he."

Held back too long, the tears ran down his cheeks
as he embraced his son.

Only Telemachus,
uncomprehending, wild
with incredulity, cried out:

"You cannot be my father Odysseus! Meddling spirits conceived this trick to twist the knife in me!
No man of woman born could work these wonders
by his own craft, unless a god came into it with ease to turn him young or old at will.
I swear you were in rags and old,
and here you stand like one of the immortals!"

Odysseus brought his ranging mind to bear
and said:

"This is not princely, to be swept away by wonder at your father's presence.
No other Odysseus will ever come,
for he and I are one, the same; his bitter fortune and his wanderings are mine."
Twenty years gone. and I am back again
on my own island.

As for my change of skin.

that is a charm Athena, Hope of Soldiers, uses as she will: she has the knack

to make me seem a beggar man sometimes and sometimes young, with finer clothes about me.
It is no hard thing for the gods of heaven
to glorify a man or bring him low."

When he had spoken, down he sat.

Then, throwing

his arms around this marvel of a father Telemachus began to weep. Salt tears rose from the wells of longing in both men, and cries burst from both as keen and fluttering
as those of the great taloned hawk,

whose nestlings farmers take before they fly.
So helplessly they cried, pouring out tears,
and might have gone on weeping so till sundown,
had not Telemachus said:

“Dear father! Tell me what kind of vessel put you here ashore on Ithaca? Your sailors, who were they?
I doubt you made it, walking on the sea!”

Then said Odysseus, who had borne the barren sea:

“Only plain truth shall I tell you, child.
Great seafarers, the Phaeacians, gave me passage as they give other wanderers. By night over the open ocean, while I slept,
they brought me in their cutter, set me down on Ithaca, with gifts of bronze and gold and stores of woven things. By the gods’ will these lie all hidden in a cave. I came to this wild place, directed by Athena,
so that we might lay plans to kill our enemies.
Count up the suitors for me, let me know what men at arms are there, how many men.
I must put all my mind to it, to see if we two by ourselves can take them on or if we should look round for help.”

replied:

Why is Telemachus initially doubtful of Odysseus’ words?
“O Father, all my life your fame
as a fighting man has echoed in my ears—
your skill with weapons and the tricks of war—
but what you speak of is a staggering thing, beyond imagining, for me. How can two men do battle with a houseful in their prime?4
For I must tell you this is no affair
of ten or even twice ten men, but scores, throng of them. You shall see, here and now.
The number from Dulichium alone is fifty-two picked men, with armorer,
a half dozen; twenty-four came from Same.
[1100] twenty from Zacynthus; our own island
accounts for twelve, high-ranked, and their retainers.
Medon the crier, and the Master Harper.
besides a pair of handymen at feasts.
If we go in against all these
I fear we pay in salt blood for your vengeance.
You must think hard

Odysseus

who had endured the long war and the sea
answered:

“I'll tell you now.

Suppose Athena’s arm is over us, and Zeus
her father’s, must I rack my brains for more?”

Clearheaded Telemachus looked hard and said:

“Those two are great defenders, no one doubts it,
but throned in the serene clouds overhead:
other affairs of men and gods they have to rule over.”

And the hero answered:

“Before long they will stand to right and left of us in combat, in the shouting, when the test comes—

[1120] Here is your part: at break of day tomorrow home with you, go mingle with our princes.

Critical Viewing

Why do you think scenes such as this were depicted on Greek pottery?

[Speculate]
your springing heart, no matter what I suffer,
no matter if they pull me by the heels
or practice shots at me, to drive me out.
Look on, hold down your anger. You may even plead with them, by heaven! in gentle terms
to quit their horseplay—not that they will heed you, rash as they are, facing their day of wrath.
Now fix the next step in your mind.

Athena,
counseling me, will give me word, and I shall signal to you, nodding: at that point round up all armor, lances, gear of war left in our hall, and stow the lot away back in the vaulted storeroom. When the suitors miss those arms and question you, be soft
in what you say: answer:

'I thought I'd move them out of the smoke. They seemed no longer those bright arms Odysseus left us years ago when he went off to Troy. Here where the fire's hot breath came, they had grown black and drear.
One better reason, too, I had from Zeus:
suppose a brawl starts up when you are drunk,
you might be crazed and bloody one another,
and that would stain your feast, your courtship. Tempered iron can magnetize a man.'

Say that.

But put aside two broadswords and two spears
for our own use, two oxhide shields nearby when we go into action. Pallas Athena and Zeus All-Provident will see you through, bemusing our young friends.

Now one thing more.

If son of mine you are and blood of mine,
let no one hear Odysseus is about.
Neither Laertes, nor the swineherd here,
nor any slave, nor even Penelope.
But you and I alone must learn how far the women are corrupted; we should know how to locate good men among our hands, the loyal and respectful, and the shirkers\(^5\)
who take you lightly, as alone and young.'

How does Odysseus tell his son to respond if the suitors "practice shots" on Odysseus?
Argus

Odysseus heads for town with Eumaeus. Outside the palace, Odysseus’ old dog, Argus, is lying at rest as his long-absent master approaches.

While he spoke

an old hound, lying near, pricked up his ears and lifted up his muzzle. This was Argus, trained as a puppy by Odysseus,

but never taken on a hunt before his master sailed for Troy. The young men, afterward, hunted wild goats with him, and hare, and deer,

but he had grown old in his master’s absence.

Treated as rubbish now, he lay at last upon a mass of dung before the gates—manure of mules and cows, piled there until fieldhands could spread it on the king’s estate.

Abandoned there, and half destroyed with flies,

old Argus lay.

But when he knew he heard

Odysseus’ voice nearby, he did his best to wag his tail, nose down, with flattened ears,

having no strength to move nearer his master.

And the man looked away,

wiping a salt tear from his cheek; but he hid this from Eumaeus. Then he said:

“I marvel that they leave this hound to lie

here on the dung pile;

he would have been a fine dog, from the look of him,

though I can’t say as to his power and speed

when he was young. You find the same good build in house dogs, table dogs landowners keep all for style.”

And you replied, Eumaeus:

“A hunter owned him—but the man is dead

in some far place. If this old hound could show

the form he had when Lord Odysseus left him,

going to Troy, you’d see him swift and strong.

He never shrank from any savage thing he’d brought to bay in the deep woods; on the scent

no other dog kept up with him. Now misery has him in leash. His owner died abroad, and here the women slaves will take no care of him.
You know how servants are: without a master
they have no will to labor, or excel.
For Zeus who views the wide world takes away half the manhood of a man, that day
he goes into captivity and slavery."

Eumaeus crossed the court and went straight forward into the megaron among the suitors:
but death and darkness in that instant closed
the eyes of Argus, who had seen his master, Odysseus, after twenty years.

The Suitors

Still disguised as a beggar, Odysseus enters his home.
He is confronted by the haughty suitor Antinous.

But here Antinous broke in, shouting:

"God!
Get over,
stand in the passage! Nudge my table, will you?
Egyptian whips are sweet
to what you’ll come to here, you nosing rat, making your pitch to everyone!
These men have bread to throw away on you because it is not theirs. Who cares? Who spares another’s food, when he has more than plenty?"

With guile Odysseus drew away, then said:

"A pity that you have more looks than heart.
You’d grudge a pinch of salt from your own larder to your own handyman. You sit here, fat on others’ meat, and cannot bring yourself to rummage out a crust of bread for me!"

Then anger made Antinous’ heart beat hard,
and, glowering under his brows, he answered:

What is Argus’ relationship to Odysseus?

Odyssey, Part 2, The Return of Odysseus ♦ 1029
"Now!

You think you'll shuffle off and get away after that impudence? Oh, no you don't!"

The stool he let fly hit the man's right shoulder on the packed muscle under the shoulder blade—like solid rock, for all the effect one saw. Odysseus only shook his head, containing thoughts of bloody work, as he walked on, then sat, and dropped his loaded bag again upon the door sill. Facing the whole crowd he said, and eyed them all:

“One word only, my lords, and suitors of the famous queen.
One thing I have to say.
There is no pain, no burden for the heart when blows come to a man, and he defending his own cattle—his own cows and lambs.
Here it was otherwise. Antinous hit me for being driven on by hunger—how many bitter seas men cross for hunger! If beggars interest the gods, if there are Furies pent in the dark to avenge a poor man's wrong, then may Antinous meet his death before his wedding day!"

Then said Eupeithes' son, Antinous: "Enough.

Eat and be quiet where you are, or shamble elsewhere, unless you want these lads to stop your mouth pulling you by the heels, or hands and feet, over the whole floor, till your back is peeled!"

But now the rest were mortified, and someone spoke from the crowd of young bucks to rebuke him:

“A poor show, that—hitting this famished tramp—bad business, if he happened to be a god.
You know they go in foreign guise, the gods do, looking like strangers, turning up in towns and settlements to keep an eye on manners, good or bad.”

But at this notion Antinous only shrugged.
Telemachus, after the blow his father bore, sat still without a tear, though his heart felt the blow. Slowly he shook his head from side to side, containing murderous thoughts.

Penelope on the higher level of her room had heard the blow, and knew who gave it. Now she murmured:

"Would god you could be hit yourself, Antinous—hit by Apollo's bowshot!"

And Eurynome, her housekeeper, put in:

"He and no other?"

If all we pray for came to pass, not one would live till dawn!"

Her gentle mistress said:

"Oh, Nan, they are a bad lot; they intend ruin for all of us; but Antinous appears a blacker-hearted hound than any.

Here is a poor man come, a wanderer, driven by want to beg his bread, and everyone in hall gave bits, to cram his bag—only Antinous threw a stool, and banged his shoulder!"

So she described it, sitting in her chamber among her maids—while her true lord was eating. Then she called in the forester and said:

"Go to that man on my behalf, Eumaeus, and send him here, so I can greet and question him. Abroad in the great world, he may have heard rumors about Odysseus—may have known him!"

Penelope

In the evening, Penelope interrogates the old beggar:

"Friend, let me ask you first of all: who are you, where do you come from, of what nation and parents were you born?"
And he replied:

"My lady, never a man in the wide world should have a fault to find with you. Your name goes out under heaven like the sweet honor of some god-fearing king, who rules

in equity over the strong: his black lands bear

both wheat and barley, fruit trees laden bright,

new lambs at lambing time—and the deep sea

gives great hauls of fish by his good strategy,

so that his folk fare well.

O my dear lady,

this being so, let it suffice to ask me

of other matters—not my blood, my homeland.

Do not enforce me to recall my pain.

My heart is sore: but I must not be found sitting in tears here, in another's house:

it is not well forever to be grieving.

One of the maids might say—or you might think—

I had got maudlin over cups of wine."

And Penelope replied:

"Stranger, my looks,

my face, my carriage, were soon lost or faded

when the Achaeans crossed the sea to Troy,

Odysseus my lord among the rest.

If he returned, if he were here to care for me,

I might be happily renowned!

But grief instead heaven sent me—years of pain.

Sons of the noblest families on the islands,

Dulichium, Same, wooded Zacynthus,

with native Ithacans, are here to court me,

against my wish; and they consume this house.

Can I give proper heed to guest or suppliant

or herald on the realm's affairs?

How could I?

wasted with longing for Odysseus, while here

they press for marriage.

Ruses served my turn

to draw the time out—first a close-grained web

I had the happy thought to set up weaving

on my big loom in hall. I said, that day:

'Young men—my suitors, now my lord is dead.

let me finish my weaving before I marry,
or else my thread will have been spun in vain.
It is a shroud I weave for Lord Laertes
when cold Death comes to lay him on his bier.
The country wives would hold me in dishonor
if he, with all his fortune, lay unshrouded.'
I reached their hearts that way, and they agreed.
So every day I wove on the great loom,
but every night by torchlight I unwove it;
and so for three years I deceived the Achaeans.
But when the seasons brought a fourth year on,
as long months waned, and the long days were spent,
through impudent folly in the slinking maids
they caught me—clamored up to me at night;
I had no choice then but to finish it.
And now, as matters stand at last,
I have no strength left to evade a marriage,
cannot find any further way; my parents urge it upon me, and my son will not stand by while they eat up his property.
He comprehends it, being a man full-grown,
able to oversee the kind of house
Zeus would endow with honor.

But you too
confide in me, tell me your ancestry.
You were not born of mythic oak or stone."

The Challenge

Pressed by the suitors to choose a husband from among them, Penelope says she will marry the man who can string Odysseus' bow and shoot an arrow through twelve axhandle sockets. The suitors try and fail. Still in disguise, Odysseus asks for a turn and gets it.

And Odysseus took his time,

1360 turning the bow, tapping it, every inch,
for borings that termites might have made
while the master of the weapon was abroad.
The suitors were now watching him, and some jested among themselves:

"A bow lover!"

"Dealer in old bows!"

"Maybe he has one like it at home!"

"Or has an itch to make one for himself."

"See how he handles it, the sly old buzzard!"

And one disdainful suitor added this:

"May his fortune grow an inch for every inch he bends it!"

1365 But the man skilled in all ways of contending,
satisfied by the great bow's look and heft,
like a musician, like a harper, when with quiet hand upon his instrument
he draws between his thumb and forefinger 1370 a sweet new string upon a peg: so effortlessly Odysseus in one motion strung the bow.
Then slid his right hand down the cord and plucked it, so the taut gut vibrating hummed and sang a swallow's note.

and all their faces changed. Then Zeus thundered overhead, one loud crack for a sign.
And Odysseus laughed within him that the son

He picked one ready arrow from his table where it lay bare: the rest were waiting still in the quiver for the young men’s turn to come.
He nocked\textsuperscript{16} it, let it rest across the handgrip,
and drew the string and grooved butt of the arrow,

He dropped his eyes and nodded, and the prince Telemachus, true son of King Odysseus, belted his sword on, clapped hand to his spear, and with a clink and glitter of keen bronze stood by his chair, in the forefront near his father.

Odysseus' Revenge

Now shrugging off his rags the wiliest fighter of the islands leapt and stood on the broad doorsill, his own bow in his hand. He poured out at his feet a rain of arrows from the quiver and spoke to the crowd:

"So much for that. Your clean-cut game is over. Now watch me hit a target that no man has hit before, if I can make this shot. Help me, Apollo."

He drew to his fist the cruel head of an arrow for Antinous just as the young man leaned to lift his beautiful drinking cup, embossed, two-handled, golden: the cup was in his fingers: the wine was even at his lips: and did he dream of death? How could he? In that revelry amid his throng of friends who would imagine a single foe—though a strong foe indeed—could dare to bring death's pain on him and darkness on his eyes? Odysseus' arrow hit him under the chin and punched up to the feathers through his throat.

Backward and down he went, letting the winecup fall from his shocked hand. Like pipes his nostrils jetted crimson runnels, a river of mortal red, and one last kick upset his table. Now as they craned to see their champion where he lay everyone on his feet. Wildly they turned and scanned the walls in the long room for arms; but not a shield, not a good ashen spear was there for a man to take and throw. All they could do was yell in outrage at Odysseus:

"Foul! to shoot at a man! That was your last shot!"

"Your own throat will be slit for this!"

"Our finest lad is down!"

You killed the best on Ithaca." "Buzzards will tear your eyes out!"

For they imagined as they wished—that it was a wild shot, an unintended killing—fools, not to comprehend they were already in the grip of death. But glaring under his brows Odysseus answered:

"You yellow dogs, you thought I'd never make it home from the land of Troy. You took my house to plunder. You dared bid for my wife while I was still alive."

17. wiliest (wi' a est) adj. craftiest; slyest.
18. revelry (rev' al ri) n. boisterous festivity.

What happens to Antinous?
Contempt was all you had for the gods who rule wide heaven, contempt for what men say of you hereafter. Your last hour has come. You die in blood."

As they all took this in, sickly green fear pulled at their entrails, and their eyes flickered looking for some hatch or hideaway from death. Eurymachus alone could speak. He said:

"If you are Odysseus of Ithaca come back, all that you say these men have done is true. Rash actions, many here, more in the countryside. But here he lies, the man who caused them all. Antinous was the ringleader, he whipped us on to do these things. He cared less for a marriage than for the power Cronion has denied him as king of Ithaca. For that he tried to trap your son and would have killed him. He is dead now and has his portion. Spare your own people. As for ourselves, we'll make restitution of wine and meat consumed, and add, each one, a tithe of twenty oxen with gifts of bronze and gold to warm your heart. Meanwhile we cannot blame you for your anger."

Odysseus glowered under his black brows and said:

"Not for the whole treasure of your fathers, all you enjoy, lands, flocks, or any gold put up by others, would I hold my hand. There will be killing till the score is paid. You forced yourselves upon this house. Fight your way out, or run for it, if you think you'll escape death. I doubt one man of you skins by."

They felt their knees fail and their hearts—but heard Eurymachus for the last time rallying them.

"Friends," he said, "the man is implacable. Now that he's got his hands on bow and quiver he'll shoot from the big doorstone there until he kills us to the last man. Fight, I say. let's remember the joy of it. Swords out! Hold up your tables to deflect his arrows. After me, everyone: rush him where he stands."
If we can budge him from the door, if we can pass into the town, we'll call out men to chase him. This fellow with his bow will shoot no more."

He drew his own sword as he spoke, a broadsword of fine bronze, honed like a razor on either edge. Then crying hoarse and loud he hurled himself at Odysseus. But the kingly man let fly an arrow at that instant, and the quivering feathered butt sprang to the nipple of his breast as the barb stuck in his liver. The bright broadsword clanged down. He lurched and fell aside, pitching across his table. His cup, his bread and meat, were spilt and scattered far and wide, and his head slammed on the ground. Revulsion, anguish in his heart, with both feet kicking out, he downed his chair, while the shrouding wave of mist closed on his eyes.

Amphinomus now came running at Odysseus, broadsword naked in his hand. He thought to make the great soldier give way at the door. But with a spear throw from behind Telemachus hit him between the shoulders, and the lancehead drove clear through his chest. He left his feet and fell forward, thudding, forehead against the ground. Telemachus swerved around him, leaving the long dark spear planted in Amphinomus. If he paused to yank it out someone might jump him from behind or cut him down with a sword at the moment he bent over. So he ran—ran from the tables to his father's side and halted, panting, saying:

"Father let me bring you a shield and spear, a pair of spears, a helmet. I can arm on the run myself; I'll give outfits to Eumaeus and this cowherd. Better to have equipment."

Said Odysseus:

"Run then, while I hold them off with arrows as long as the arrows last. When all are gone if I'm alone they can dislodge me."

What does Telemachus want to bring to his father to help him fight the suitors?
ran to the room where spears and armor lay. He caught up four light shields, four pairs of spears, four helms of war high-plumed with flowing manes, and ran back, loaded down, to his father's side. He was the first to pull a helmet on and slide his bare arm in a buckler strap. The servants armed themselves, and all three took their stand beside the master of battle.

While he had arrows he aimed and shot, and every shot brought down one of his huddling enemies. But when all barbs had flown from the bowman's fist, he leaned his bow in the bright entryway beside the door, and armed: a four-ply shield hard on his shoulder, and a crested helm, horsetailed, nodding stormy upon his head, then took his tough and bronze-shod spears....

Aided by Athena, Odysseus, Telemachus, Eumaeus, and other faithful herdsmen kill all the suitors.

And Odysseus looked around him, narrow-eyed, for any others who had lain hidden while death's black fury passed. In blood and dust he saw that crowd all fallen, many and many slain.

Think of a catch that fishermen haul in to a half-moon bay in a fine-meshed net from the whitecaps of the sea: how all are poured out on the sand, in throes for the salt sea, twitching their cold lives away in Helios' fiery air: so lay the suitors heaped on one another.

Penelope's Test

Penelope tests Odysseus to prove he really is her husband.

Greathearted Odysseus, home at last, was being bathed now by Eurynome and rubbed with golden oil, and clothed again in a fresh tunic and a cloak. Athena lent him beauty, head to foot. She made him taller, and massive, too, with crisping hair.
in curls like petals of wild hyacinth
but all red-golden. Think of gold infused on silver by a craftsman, whose fine art Hephaestus taught him, or Athena: one whose work moves to delight: just so she lavished beauty over Odysseus' head and shoulders.
He sat then in the same chair by the pillar,
-facing his silent wife, and said:

"Strange woman,
the immortals of Olympus made you hard,
harder than any. Who else in the world would keep aloof as you do from her husband
if he returned to her from years of trouble, cast on his own land in the twentieth year?

Nurse, make up a bed for me to sleep on.
Her heart is iron in her breast."

Penelope
spoke to Odysseus now. She said:

"Strange man,
if man you are . . . This is no pride on my part nor scorn for you—not even wonder, merely.
I know so well how you—how he—appeared boarding the ship for Troy. But all the same . . .

Make up his bed for him, Eurycleia.
Place it outside the bedchamber my lord built with his own hands. Pile the big bed with fleeces, rugs, and sheets of purest linen."

With this she tried him to the breaking point,
and he turned on her in a flash raging:

"Woman, by heaven you've stung me now!
Who dared to move my bed?
No builder had the skill for that—unless a god came down to turn the trick. No mortal in his best days could budge it with a crowbar.
There is our pact and pledge, our secret sign,
built into that bed—my handiwork
and no one else's!

An old trunk of olive grew like a pillar on the building plot.
and I laid out our bedroom round that tree,
lined up the stone walls, built the walls and roof,
gave it a doorway and smooth-fitting doors.
Then I lopped off the silvery leaves and branches, hewed and shaped that stump from the roots up into a bedpost, drilled it, let it serve as model for the rest. I planed them all, inaid them all with silver, gold and ivory,
and stretched a bed between—a pliant web
of oxhide thongs dyed crimson.

There’s our sign!

I know no more. Could someone else’s hand have sawn that trunk and dragged the frame away?”

Their secret! as she heard it told, her knees grew tremulous and weak, her heart failed her.
With eyes brimming tears she ran to him,
throwing her arms around his neck, and kissed him,
murmuring:

“Do not rage at me, Odysseus!
No one ever matched your caution! Think what difficulty the gods gave: they denied us life together in our prime and flowering years, kept us from crossing into age together:
Forgive me, don’t be angry. I could not welcome you with love on sight! I armed myself long ago against the frauds of men, impostors who might come—and all those many whose underhanded ways bring evil on! . . .
But here and now, what sign could be so clear as this of our own bed?
No other man has ever laid eyes on it—
only my own slave, Actoris, that my father sent with me as a gift—she kept our door.
You make my stiff heart know that I am yours.”

Now from his breast into his eyes the ache of longing mounted, and he wept at last,
his dear wife, clear and faithful, in his arms,
The Ending

Odysseus is reunited with his father. Athena commands that peace prevail between Odysseus and the relatives of the slain suitors. Odysseus has regained his family and his kingdom.

Thinking About the Selection

1. Respond: Do you think that Odysseus' revenge is justified? Why or why not?

2. (a) Recall: Which act begins Odysseus' revenge on the suitors? (b) Analyze: Why does this act catch the suitors by surprise?

3. (a) Recall: What planning does Odysseus do before battling the suitors? (b) Analyze: How does his planning help him defeat his opponents?

4. (a) Recall: How does the fight turn out? (b) Analyze: Even though some suitors have been crueler than others, why does Odysseus take equal revenge on all of them?

5. (a) Recall: What is Penelope’s test, and how does Odysseus pass it? (b) Infer: Why does Penelope feel the need to test Odysseus, even though he has abandoned his disguise? (c) Interpret: Is the mood after the test altogether happy? Explain.

6. (a) Connect: Are Odysseus' actions in dealing with the suitors consistent with his actions in earlier episodes of the epic? Explain. (b) Assess: Do you consider him heroic?

7. Evaluate: How do you think the problem of the suitors should have been handled? Why?

Homer

(circa 800 B.C.)

A legendary poet and historian, Homer is credited with two of the most famous and enduring epics of all time: the Iliad and the Odyssey. Their impressive length and scope have resulted in the coinage of an adjective from the author's name; homeric, meaning "large-scale, massive, or enormous."

Facts about Homer's life have been lost over time. Scholars even disagree about whether the Iliad and the Odyssey were written by the same person—and whether Homer existed at all! According to tradition, however, Homer was born in western Asia Minor, and he was blind.

In later centuries, the Iliad and the Odyssey were the basis of Greek and Roman education.
