// EDITOR'S NOTE

Johnathan J. Jacko

Whether you are a junior or a senior, 1D can help you answer the core question: do you regret getting rejected from Yale?

To our incoming '25s, gap year '24s, and '23s with two terms of on-campus experience, welcome home. You've been bombarded with pamphlet after magazine after email. Here's one more.

This is all new to you. You undoubtedly have astronomical expectations for your college experience. You are here to springboard your future, make lifelong friends, and explore your passions. This issue of 1D will help you lower those expectations. We've included important information for the upcoming years, none of which is factually accurate. That being said, satire is based on truth, so you'll have to figure this one out for yourself.

The first of these pamphlets was written in 1908, by yours truly, John J. Jacko. Since then, we've seen talented writer after writer come through our doors, and boasted alumni like Mindy Kaling and Dr. Seuss. And yes, some of our alumni have been judged harshly by contemporary eyes, but we nonetheless forgive Mindy for her failure to make Ocean's 8 enjoyable. We hope that we can all come together to agree that it was Cate Blanchett who really dropped the ball there.

All jokes aside, we're happy you're here. As much as this place can suck, at least it gives enough material to make a satire magazine. You're going to love it here. Welcome home.

STUDENT LIFE AT DARTMOUTH

To celebrate the self expression of our very own Dartmouth students, the Office of Admissions in collaboration with Rauner Special Collections Library has created a compilation of Giancarlo '22's best cumshots. Here are some of our favorite ones—to see more, check out dartgo.org/summa-cum-shot

At Dartmouth, school spirit is strong. Whether at the Homecoming football game, hiking with the DOC, or canoeing with the Ledyard Canoe Club, our students have the granite of New Hampshire in their muscles and their brains. Speaking of brain, Giancarlo '22 will suck your soul out if you're looking for oral sex. Go Big Green!

Giancarlo '22 will give you "the D". Yes you read that correctly. By "the D" we mean Giancarlo's penis. He will also take your "D" if you have one. He is really down for whatever. You, your significant other, your family pet...you name it!

Dartmouth's alumni network is unparalleled with thousands of active alumni who love to engage with the college. In fact, close to 12% of alumni have engaged in some form of sexual activity with Giancarlo '22.

Our students bring their passions to campus. Dartmouth has hundreds of clubs and sports teams to choose from. Clubs are a great way to become involved in a community and meet other students such as Giancarlo '22. If you want to, (and you'll want to) he will have sex with you.

BEN QUINE '23

MAJOR: UHHHHHHH

Whether studying novel gene expression techniques or working on a so-so postmodern poetry collection, Ben Quine '23 is loosely focused on his constantly changing major. Before coming to Dartmouth, Ben was confident that he wanted to pursue a computer science major and go into software development. But after taking advantage of Dartmouth's multidisciplinary liberal arts curriculum — and getting a 46% on his CS 1 midterm — Ben discovered his real passion was for philosophy. "I never had any exposure to philosophy prior to college, and I really fell in love with it immediately" says Ben.

But then the next term Ben took a course in the classics department for the distrib, and discovered that that was actually his passion. "The thing is, my ex is in classics, and we kinda ended on bad terms, so yeah I had to drop the classics major" continues Ben. "There was a solid month where I thought I'd do the pre-med track, but it turns out starting your sophomore spring is too late."

According to his professors, Ben has excelled at intro classes across a diversity of disciplines, in each performing just well enough that he mistakes his innate talent for actual passion. "I love the academic freedom Dartmouth has given me. While my friends back home have graduated in two years from state colleges at no cost, I've been able to take a class in every department..." says Ben quietly trailing off.

Making the Most of a Dartmouth Education, and Realizing How Your Public School Failed You

At Dartmouth, you'll experience many new and exciting academic opportunities. Especially if you came from an underfunded public school where you had no academic opportunities to begin with! We've collected a few Dartmouth students who have shared their stories about what it's like studying at Dartmouth, and reflecting on how the public education system has failed them and millions of other Americans.

Lindsey Lee, '23 - Dallas, Texas

"Dartmouth has a really robust credit transfer program, where you can knock out prerequisites if you have AP placement, or some other form of college credit. Or so I've heard. My school didn't offer AP classes, so I was forced to take Math 1 with the rest of the other kids who came from schools that couldn't afford AP programs. Or soap to stock the bathrooms with."

Austin Cooper, '24 - San Diego, California (The Poor Part)

"Every Dartmouth class has been really challenging, and in a good way. I'm a Biology major, so I'm taking Intro to Ecology for the first time. Everyone here seems like they're really smart! Either that, or they came from a boarding school. I came from the kind of high school where all my biology assignments involved coloring pictures of fish, so it's taking me a while to get used to having teachers who don't hate me, their job, and the idea of educating children in general."

Connor Ting '22 - Fayetteville, Kentucky

"As a person of color myself, I love the diversity of this campus. Sure, this is a PWI, and there's inherent problems with that, but the last time there was a teacher who was a person of color at my school, kids would graffiti various slurs on his door. Yeah, the microaggressions here suck, but I much prefer them to the aggressive aggressions."

Marc Jordan, '24 - New Jersey, New Jersey

"One of the things I looked most forward to in college was the opportunity to devote myself to my studies. Or, the little time I have to actually studying when I'm not trying to juggle working three student jobs in order to pay off the 'student contribution' part of my tuition."

YOUR CLASS SCHEDULE

You're not in high school anymore! You choose when to take your classes. Here's a ranking of the three worst periods to attend class in.

- 6B This is alright when it's light out, but once Dartmouth gets into the winter months, leaving your classroom at 9:30 on Thursday nights becomes pretty disorienting.
- 9L The 9L period is from 8:50-9:55 on Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings. Yikes! Make sure your prof doesn't grade on attendance.
- 2 The 2 period is a real uphill battle. 2 period classes meet from 2:10-3:15 Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Yes, it's not hard to be awake by 2:10, but if you do not meet in the center of the green at 2:30 each Wednesday, when the sky darkens and embers fall from the tower—that is to say if you do not burn your scraps of meat and lettuce in the central bonfire in hopes that they reach our deity of academic success, Lethegaia—well, good luck maintaining your schedule. Lethegaia — blessed be the exalted one — is a sphinx who is always crouched, so you never have to see any of the nasty bits. It is your responsibility to consistently offer tributes. If you are not entirely devoted to the life force behind this institution, you have no chance of long or even short term success.

Once he has been fed and his homunculus-shaped form appears, silhouetted by the night-clouds of three in the afternoon, it is your moral obligation to shield your eyes and hide in your dorm. Enjoy the burst of energy and glue-sniffing high. If you have black-out curtains, this is a great time to squeeze in some extra studying!

If you do not regularly offer tributes to Lethegaia, expect aches, pains, trouble sleeping and general fatigue. You may lose your motivation, or sleep in spurts. You will wonder, "should I just try consulting?" This will continue until you get enough sleep and rest in general, so your best bet is to bring Lethegaia more tributes. He especially enjoys bagels.

WELCOME HOME

Exploration at Dartmouth extends to many places - like here in the East Reading Room. What happened to the grey-shirted girl? Is she sleeping? Is she dead? More importantly, what happened to you? In your Sisyphean pursuit of codified academic approval, did you ever think to check if you were sleeping or dead?

CLUBS AT DARTMOUTH

Performance Groups (Acapella/Dance/Improv)

Have you always been passionate about [singing/dancing/self-humiliation]? Are you a [vocalist/performer/narcissist] who enjoys [the arts/the arts/loud sex jokes]? College is the perfect opportunity to explore these interests for the first time. All you need is a little determination to put yourself out there and [a live-in vocal coach/a modicum of athleticism/a suggestion to get us started].

Religious and Spiritual Groups

Christian/Jewish/Muslim/Buddhist/Atheist etc. students can find an enriching spiritual environment in the club corresponding to their religion. At least, umm that's what we'd assume? To be honest, we're not actually really sure what they do. Probably doing Christian/Jewish/Muslim/Buddhist/Atheist stuff.

Woodsman team, threatening you

Dartmouth Outing Club (DOC)

A lot of people are drawn to Dartmouth for the lush beauty of the upper valley. However, not every Dartmouth student knows that there is only one way to experience this bounty of nature: paying dues to the DOC. New Hampshire's rugged public-access trails are notoriously dangerous for the non-paying public. Accidents happen. You'll be a lot safer with us. Shame if you were on the wrong end of a freak hunting accident. Just call it insurance.

I knew a guy who thought he could just waltz around under the trees. Thought he was too good for the DOC. Found his body 20 miles downstream of the Ledyard clubhouse with a trekking pole through his chest. Good man. Shoulda joined the DOC.

Dartmouth Inning Club (DIC)

Not a fan of the outdoors? Wallet a little light this month? That's alright. There's always the Dartmouth Inning Club. Activities include:

- Showering regularly
- Appreciating running water
- Not waking up at 4am to do a 2 hour hike to the top of a mountain only to be met by a mediocre sunrise largely obscured by clouds
- Having a single-digit number of bug-bites
- Saving money by not purchasing an $112 Patagonia windbreaker
- Parcheesi nights (Robo Basement, Tuesdays at 9)

Dartmouth Outies Club (DOC)

Have an outie belly button? You might have what it takes. Welcome to the most exclusive club on campus. Founded by Elias Freeworth three days after the establishment of Dartmouth College, the Dartmouth Outie Club celebrates only the most exceptional outies of the college on the hill. The Outie Club boasts a prominent and involved alumni network that prove to be an outstanding resource for members to reach out to. Auditions required. Bring your own ruler.

Dartmouth Innies Club (DIC)

Founded by Tobias Freeworth four days after the establishment of Dartmouth College, the Dartmouth Innie Club is home to innie aficionados of all navel varieties. To quote current president Martin Chao '22, "you really just have to be excited about innies, we really put the in(nie) in inclusive."

The Dartmouth

Founded in 1799, The Dartmouth is America's oldest college newspaper. It's weekly publication boasts a wide reader base entirely composed of the people who wrote that week's articles and geriatric alums. For those interested in journalism, contributing to The Dartmouth is a great way to realize that no one cares about your dying profession.

For many students, club socials are a core part of the Dartmouth extracurricular experience. Above, two members of the Ledyard Canoe club engage in a light-hearted game of "smackems!"

A group of students, all entirely engrossed in the latest issue of the Review

The Dartmouth Review

While the Dartmouth Review publishes a conservative perspective, it is widely respected across campus for its commitment to honest and thoughtful reporting. It would be impossible to find more than a handful of students, nay, even one, who speaks ill of such a prestigious and principled publication.

Collis After After Dark

Long shadows and unspoken prophecies. The light of the harvest moon gleams menacingly through the parting clouds. It is time. Hooded figures in dark robes emerge from the shadows, curved knives glinting from beneath their long sleeves in the still night air. Looking down, you see your arms and legs bound with coarse rope, securing you in the center of the intricate circle painted in red over the bed of corn husks. Low chanting begins, reverberating in your chest. You are not afraid. There is little to fear in a future so certain. Welcome to Collis After After Dark.

MEAT, YOUR PROFESSOR

The Dartmouth experience gives students opportunities to form close relationships with their professors, all leading experts in their fields. Today, we're turning up the heat and putting a spotlight on Charles "Chuck" Berger, a beloved professor of a seasoned 16 years in Dartmouth's ecology department.

Berger is certainly a cut above the rest among Dartmouth's faculty. Braised in the field for his incredible work, Berger continues to push boundaries and have a real steak in modern global issues. Berger loves getting to know his students through Dartmouth's intimate classroom environments, and is fired up every day to come teach and have his students grill him with questions. His students love his rare, savory bites of information and agree that Berger is really a professor that's "worth his salt."

"Being a literal grilled steak definitely makes me stand out among the other professors in the department. But I would think that after being published countless times in the world's most notable ecology journals, I would have lived that down by now. I just want people to commend me for my research, or my ability to lead focused student discussions during my lectures."

Berger may be the recipient of the Jerome Goldstein Award for Distinguished Teaching, but his competency as a professor really sizzled this Spring when he fought off the 3 dogs on the green that were drawn to his smell. Berger commented on his feat, saying: "My biggest accomplishment has to be inventing a cheap, sustainable method of managing nutrient runoff from fertilizers to prevent eutrophication... But I bet they're just gonna talk about the dog thing."

We hope that incoming students find space in their schedules to sink their teeth into one of Professor Berger's juicy courses, and get a taste of some of Dartmouth's incredible faculty. Students should be advised that Berger teaches primarily at the intermediate and advanced level; prerequisites for much of his coursework includes background knowledge in nutrient cycles, population ecology, and being vegetarian.

Dartmouth can get a reputation for lacking social spaces outside of Greek life. But the truth is, Dartmouth is home to a myriad of alternative social spaces.

1. *The FOCO Stir Fry Line

If there's one thing the FOCO stir fry line provides, it's a dependable social space. When the station is open, you can find students from all parts of campus socializing there. Make sure to give your linemates a knowing nod as if to say "look at us, both getting stir fry." Perhaps even comment on a shared ingredient. The possibilities are endless.

2. *The DOC

Tired of the exclusivity and insular nature of greek spaces? Don't want to be a member of an organization with a complicated and checkered history of racism and discrimination? Think that it's stupid that — wait which alternative social space are we on again? DOC? Oh. Ummmm. Hey at least it's not gender segregated!

3. *That one walkway between third-floor Berry and the stacks

One time we saw a group of people hanging out there. Looked like a good time.

4. *Other Colleges

After graduating, you and your high school friends all went to different colleges, each of you finding your own path and taking the first step forward into adulthood. Maybe now's the time to take a step back and reach out to see if their colleges have alternative social spaces? And actually, if they do could you please let us know? Please.

And to our frat-skeptical readers; even if none of the social spaces above appeal to you, we promise that you will find your place. At the end of the day, humans are social creatures. Whatever your very real qualms with Greek life are — whether it be lionization of binge drinking or perpetuation of campus sexual assault — in all likelihood you will eventually convince yourself there isn't anything wrong with signing up yourself. You're not capitulating to a siren song of community, brotherhood, and pong. You're not sacrificing your principles on the altar of belonging. No, no, you're just making a positive difference from the inside. If anything, it'd be wrong not to join.

Turn the page now

There are no fraternities at Dartmouth. I assure you this page is all just an unfortunate mistake—Melissa get me that goddamn intern right now—this is actually a picture of a housing community event. Interhouse ping pong, what fun!—what do you mean it was an accident Derrick, they're literally all the same person, how did you even do that—I'm so sorry for this, please go to the next page and we'll have this sorted out shortly.

enjoying four years on a campus that's still Under Construction

At Dartmouth, we pride ourselves on our beautiful campus.

Well, soon-to-be-beautiful. See, the thing is that we're kinda still in the process of building it. That being said, here's 3 handy tips to enjoy our scenic scaffolding.

1. Imagine How Beautiful It Will Be Once We're Done With It

Dartmouth Hall currently has scaffolding over the entire front side of it, but see what's behind it. Look past the scattered, half-broken bricks and that yellow construction vehicle that's there all day but never seems to be actually used, and imagine how beautiful it will be once it looks exactly the same as before, but shinier.

2. Enjoy The Sounds of Nature, and Construction

Dartmouth's unique location is the perfect place to enjoy the sweet sounds of nature. Alumni fondly remember waking up to the sweet sound of birdsong and chattering chipmunks. You'll be just as happy to know that, while we're rebuilding this entire campus, you'll be waking up to 5 a.m. jackhammering, ready to take on the world.

3. Come Back in Six Years

With the Moving Dartmouth Forward project, we want to keep Dartmouth's campus pristine and beautiful for the years to come. Which means that your year will be left behind. Come back in six years to see it once we're done! After all, it's your tuition money that's going into this!

PEE on your FRIENDS

Established in 1769, Dartmouth is home to a myriad of century-old traditions. We asked students to share their experiences with one of the College on the Hill's oldest: peeing on one's friends.

Valerie Schafer '22

"Heck yeah I pee on my friends! I still remember the first golden shower we did on trips. It really got us through that awkward stage and bonded me and all my trippies. Through the whole duration of the trip we ran around the campsite trying to wizz at each other and especially on other hikers. We even made a slip n' slide using our tarp. My only bad experience with this Dartmouth tradition is when a guy passed a kidney stone onto my forehead at a party during sophomore summer. It was a little much for me personally. But hey, we've been dating ever since!"

Frankie Rawlins '23

"I'd consider myself to be somewhat of a wizz kid. At first, I was a little shy about it and mostly peed on people's feet in the line at Collis, but I eventually came out of my shell. I'd say the turning point for me was having a tinkle at the top of the climbing wall with the whole climbing team cheering me on. That's where I really found my community here. Nowadays my roommate and I pee on each other regularly in the room or even just passing on the green. I've found Nalgene's are fun targets as well as bikers, squirrels, and old people. It's also a great way to get to know your Profs during office hours. I wouldn't do it during class though."

Jed Garvin '24

"Back at my high school we didn't do a whole lot of peer urination, so it was something completely new that I was excited to try at Dartmouth. Starting my freshman year during COVID meant my first exposure was in a virtual setting, and admittedly, it just wasn't the same to take a leak on myself over zoom with my classmates. However, I eventually found a supportive group of friends who gave me the confidence to turn on my video and unmute while we peed on ourselves. I'm beyond excited to pee with them in person this fall. I might even have enough practice by the end of the term to try my first oil change!"

Jack Dorset '23

"I personally get more of a kick out of getting peed on than doing the peeing. And that's totally ok! People are so accepting here. When I'm asked if urination is a central part of social life here at Dartmouth, I respond, no, no it isn't. Urination culture is certainly prevalent here, but no one will force you to pee if you don't want to. I can't guarantee that you won't be peed on but that's just a fact of going to college. Personally, if I'm at the house with my frat brothers on a Friday night, I'll wee on anything that moves."

FOUR YEARS FROM NOW

I have been given but one chance to warn you, my past self, of the calamity to come. I pray that this message makes its way to you, so that we may take precautions (in addition to our fantastic Dartmouth education) that will prepare us for this bleak future.

Heed these words: you cannot stop the end of times, but you may hear my counsel. Start collecting shells. Paper currency will have no power after The Leveling, so it is paramount that you begin gathering immediately. Those on the coasts live like kings, breaking the masses of dirty stragglers under their ash-covered boots. Worry not; you will be well-prepared to navigate these treacherous markets thanks to ECON 42: Intermediate Bartering and Intimidation Techniques.

Cherish and learn from your experience on First-Year Trips. I remember thinking that Hiking 2: Moderate would be the greatest athletic challenge I ever faced in my lifetime. Now, after traversing the Appalachians in the dead of winter to escape The Brigade, I relish the experience it brought me, physically and socially. Those memories of making close personal connections over 5 days in the New Hampshire wilderness only to stop talking to my trippees after week 2 came flooding back to me when I was the only survivor from our group's raid on another camp's supplies and shells.

That reminds me. There are bands of survivors, yes. But joining them is no easy task. Each time I come across a new group, I must prove my worth by demonstrating my skills and knowledge. Thankfully, we have experience performing under this kind of pressure from the even more cutthroat, life-defining arena of a capella auditions.

As much as the world around us has changed, we take comfort in the few constants we can find. Mozz sticks are still fantastic. The college has redone the Novack sidewalk another three times. Debt collectors continue to plague over former students like sickly vultures, as our student loans have been transferred to the new shell economy. Another reason to start visiting the shores.

—your future self
