

Student Plan Commission Report Will Recommend End of Quarter System

By JACK FULLER
News Editor

An end of the quarter system and the substitution of a modified semester system in its place will be recommended by the Student Planning Commission.

Fred Eychaner, chairman of the group, said Wednesday night the recommendation would be made in the commission's report scheduled for presentation early next month.

The quarters would run from the first of September until Christmas and from the beginning of February until the middle of May, Eychaner said, with the month of January devoted to independent study projects, tutorial reading, and student-organized seminars.

"By removing the pressure of formal courses, grades, and office hours, we would hope to encourage greater student involvement in the intellectual life of the university," he said.

Organize Seminars

"If students want to organize a seminar in any area not covered by current courses, they could contact professors and develop reading lists on their own," Barbara Croker, commission member, said.

"Students would be encouraged to select areas outside their majors allowing, for example, a Tech student to venture into literature or social sciences without the pressure of grades."

Faculty members would be asked to devote more time to meeting with students, and the commission feels they would be willing, Eychaner said.

"By eliminating normal course pressures for a month, faculty members would have time to increase their contact with students," he said.

Five Areas Covered

Covering five specific areas of university life, the spring report will recommend that the planning group be continued next year, Eychaner said.

The five areas to be covered are: academic regulations and the quarter system, undergraduate course structure, student activities and their relation to the administration, under-graduate professional schools, and student housing.

When it is completed, the report will be taken to Student Senate and sent to the deans of all undergraduate schools, the administrative staff, and the heads of all faculty committees and subcommittees.

AWS Urges Change In Freshman Curfew

Associated Women Students proposed freshman women receive unlimited weeknight 12:30's during winter and spring quarters next year.

Jane McCormick, AWS vice-president and rules chairman, made the proposal at Wednesday's house council meeting. The plan must still be approved by the living units.

Freshman women now have 11 p.m. hours on weeknights. They may take four 12:30s a month dur-

Most members said AWS could not be self-governing in the present university administrative set-up because students are under-represented on policy-making committees.

Even though students have greater representation now than ever before, more improvement should be made in this area, members said.

Miss Zimmerman said administration officials would appear before house council spring quarter and she called for additional suggestions to establish better communication with the administration.

In other business, the representatives voted to refer to the rules committee a proposal to revise the present standards' report system for rules infractions.

At present, standards members must submit a report to the dean of women and the AWS president on every case involving an over-night without permission violation and all infractions given extended campus penalties.

Dean of Women Patricia Thrash said the reports were extremely important in keeping AWS and her office informed.

Only if the dean of women or the AWS president thinks a case merits special attention will it be called before the AWS appeals board or the University Disciplinary Committee, Miss Zimmerman said.

SDS Signs Down, Nobody Knows Why

Two members of the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) were questioning Wednesday why a campus policeman tore down a sign promoting an SDS-sponsored speech at the University of Chicago.

Richard Due, SDS member, said he and four other persons were sitting near the student bulletin board in the Grill Tuesday when a campus policeman tore down a sign they had put up about a Tuesday night speech by Sgt. Donald Duncan, former member of the Special Forces in Viet Nam, at the U. of C.

Due said he asked the policeman why he was taking it down, and the policeman told him he would have to ask University President Dr. J. Roscoe Miller. (President Miller has been in Florida for the last week, according to his secretary).

Periodically Tear Down

The policeman, Bud Nunnemacher, said that campus police periodically tear down signs that do not pertain to Northwestern events.

He said he did not see any other signs on the board that did not pertain to Northwestern events. Due said there was one sign for Pan American Airlines next to the SDS sign.

"We actually don't have room for all our own signs there," Maurice Ekberg, director of buildings and grounds and head of the campus police, said. "We have to go around and tear them down occasionally."

Due said when he talked to Joe Miller, director of student affairs, Miller said he had not ordered the signs be removed and could not cite a passage in the student handbook banning signs for non-university events.

Due said he also talked with Dean of Students James C. McLeod Wednesday. He said McLeod could not show him a rule banning the sign.

"Everybody had some reason for the signs being torn down, but nobody could show it to us," Due said. He added the sign was regulation size.

ing fall quarter and six a month in winter and spring.

The proposal did not include fall quarter because the committee thought freshmen needed an adjustment period with limited hours. Members attending supported the limitation, but several recommended an increase in the number of 12:30s during fall.

President Lynn Zimmerman asked AWS to instigate a self-evaluation.

A small fire in an over-heated elevator motor brought Evanston firemen to the north wing of Willard Hall at 11:15 p.m. Wednesday. There were no injuries, and the damage estimate was not immediately available.

Doc Glass' Home Away from Home for Negroes

By JIM CLARE
Associate Editor

"Look at my man," Doc Glass said as the Negro student left his home. "He's got a car and money, but he's been here twice today and he'll probably be back."

The student did return. And so did a group of undergraduate Negroes from Northwestern, and a few Negro girls from National College of Education.

Some watched television in the front room, others studied in the living room, others were in the kitchen drinking soda pop and talking to Mrs. Glass. It was another Sunday night at the home of Charles "Doc" Glass, 1829 Brown Ave., in western Evanston.

The students were there because for the past 10 years, Glass has been a friend, advisor, and adopted father to NU's Negro undergraduates. His home is their only center for social life at NU, and it is always open to anyone who wants to play cards, watch TV, relax, or discuss a personal problem or a job opportunity.

Glass Helps in Recruiting

And most of the Negro athletes are at Northwestern because Glass helped recruit them, though he has no official connection with the university and receives no money for any of his services.

When the athletes visited campus as high school seniors, the undergraduates took them over to see Doc. He met them, began to correspond with them, and helped them pick a college.

"It's not hard to sell Northwestern," Glass said. "You get a great education here and a degree that means something. I emphasize the honesty of the school and the coaching staff. For example, of the last 28 Negroes at Northwestern on football scholarships, 22 graduated. That's a lot better percentage than any other Big Ten school."

Relate Better Than White Man

"I can relate to the boy's parents better than any white man," Glass continued discussing recruiting techniques. "I've been a Negro for 52 years and I've been through the same things the parents have and I know what problems the kids are going to face."

"I try to get as close to the boy's mother as I can. This is her young son and she feels better knowing an older family is looking after him."

Sterling Burke, education school freshman, had been considering another Big Ten school, he said, until his mother made a tour of NU's campus with Glass. Then the decision was made. Burke would go to Northwestern.

The athletic department finds Glass' services invaluable. Alex Agase and Larry Glass, head coaches of football and basketball respectively, praise him highly for his character and his contributions to NU.

Glass has no contact with Negro coeds or non-athletes before they get on campus, but once here, they too are usually close to the Glass family.

On the panelled wall behind Mrs. Glass were pictures of Northwestern's Negro athletes of the past 10 years. Glass keeps in touch with alums Ron Burton, Irv Cross, Dick McCauley and others. He corresponds regularly with the group and they frequently come back to visit. He takes pride in the success the graduates have had and in the help he has been able to give them.

Glass never went to college. He is employed as a custodian by the City of Evanston. But he played semi-pro football for 11 years after graduating from Evanston High School and has always been interested in sports. And so in 1956 he was at Dyche Stadium when Wilmer Fowler, a Negro sophomore, won the 100 and 220 yard dashes in the Big Ten meet.

Fowler Gave Name

Glass went on to the field to congratulate him. The two started a conversation. Fowler gave Glass the nickname Doc, and with NU's other Negro students, he started dropping over to the Glass house.

"Doc had two young daughters at the time," a current student said, "that might have had something to do with it." The daughters are Charlene, 29, and Dorothy, 28. The other Glass children are Charles Jr., 26, and Helen, 18.

Glass met Ara Parseghian, then head football coach, through Fowler the next season, and thus began his connection with the university. A connection that has grown until almost all NU's Negro students look to the Glass home for counseling and social life.

In a way, the services provided by the Glasses are self-defeating since they add to the separation of the Negro undergraduates from the rest of the student body.

But as Jim Pitts, arts and sciences senior points out, "It is possible for the Negro to get integrated into this society only as much as this society permits Doc's, as an institution, is no harmful to NU until it starts trying to bring in more Negroes and makes provision for them.

Next year, Northwestern will start an experimental program the Chicago Action Project which will bring 25 to 40 students to NU from low-advantage neighborhoods in Chicago. Many will be Negro. Glass admits the new program could cause problems.

"There's no student union, or any activity for the Negro on campus. Those new students will probably flock to me. And I just can't handle those numbers. I don't have the space in the house, and I couldn't afford it."

The new program will be discussed in Friday's article on the Negro at Northwestern.
