Into the Darkness: A Quare (Re)Membering of Los Angeles in a Time of Crises

This talk examines the ways in which Black queer folk articulate, create, and (re)construct Quare space and place in Los Angeles from 1981 to the present. I use “Quare,” a term coined by E. Patrick Johnson, as an act of (re)membering a simultaneous articulation of blackness and queerness.

Kai M. Green received his Ph.D. from the Department of American Studies and Ethnicity at the University of Southern California in 2014. He is a writer, scholar, poet, filmmaker, abolitionist, feminist and whatever else it takes to make a new and more just world. He is a postdoctoral fellow with the Sexualities Project at Northwestern (SPAN) for 2014-16.
